

BEYOND THE COPYRIGHT CRISIS: PRINCIPLES FOR CHANGE*by* PAUL EDWARD GELLER*

| | |
|---|-----|
| I. INTRODUCTION: CRISIS | 166 |
| A. Tensions in Theory | 167 |
| B. The Crisis in Practice | 172 |
| C. Why Try New Principles? | 175 |
| II. TEN TENTATIVE PRINCIPLES | 179 |
| A. The Core Creator's Right | 179 |
| 1. We each have the core right to disseminate our own creations. | 179 |
| 2. One creator's right may not be exercised to restrain the making or dissemination of others' creations. | 180 |
| 3. Creators may not exercise their rights to stop the use of techniques that are incorporated into creations or to require payment for such use..... | 181 |
| B. Specific Rights and Remedies..... | 183 |
| 4. We have moral rights to have ourselves referenced as creators, to have our creations referenced when reworked versions are disseminated, to be paid damages for failure to so reference, and to obtain relief for impaired dissemination or embodiments.. | 184 |
| 5. We have economic rights to have the unauthorized dissemination of routine copies stopped, if it threatens irremediable harm, and to be paid damages or profits arising from any unauthorized dissemination of our creations, even in reworked forms. | 187 |
| 6. Creators' rights are limited in time, and economic rights may not apply to redisseminations that common sense finds necessary to achieve such | |

*Attorney, Los Angeles. This article amplifies on a work in progress as posted in January of 2008 at <http://www.criticalcopyright.com/principles.htm>. Visual materials footnoted in Part II of this article are linked in the work in progress still posted at the same site. For their comments, the author thanks Maurizio Borghi, James Boyle, Julie Cohen, Kevin Emerson Collins, Adolf Dietz, Robert Donovan, Abraham Drassinower, Bernard Edelman, Mihály Ficsor, Axel Gosseries, Thomas Heide, Laurence Helfer, Ejan Mackaay, Emil Markov, Jerome Reichman, Mark Rose, and Pamela Samuelson. © Paul Edward Geller 2008