

Common Sense, Accommodation and Sound Policy for the Digital Music Marketplace

By Bennett Lincoff*

Table of Contents

Introduction.....	2
A. The Source of the Problem	3
B. The Source of the Failure	7
C. A Different Approach	9
I. The Music Industry’s Efforts to Preserve the Way Things Were, and Their Consequences	11
II. A Newly-Created Right, Specific to the Digital Music Marketplace, is Needed for Musical Works and Sound Recordings	28
A. Definition and Scope	28
B. Ownership.....	30
C. Authority to Grant Non-Exclusive Licenses; Accounting for Royalties Earned	30
D. Authority to Grant Exclusive Licenses.....	32
E. Conduct for Which a License Would Be Required; Parties Who Would Be Liable.....	32
F. Copyright Infringement Would Not Significantly Impair the Market for the Digital Transmission Right.....	36
G. Effect on Other Rights and Other Works	37
H. Application of the Digital Transmission Right to Over-the-Air Broadcast Radio Stations, As Well As to the Web Sites They Operate	38
III. The Most Efficient and Effective Way to Administer the Digital Transmission Right Is Through a Combination

*Mr. Lincoff is an intellectual property law attorney, consultant and writer with more than twenty years experience in music licensing. He was formerly the Director of Legal Affairs for New Media at the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (“ASCAP”). In 1995, he formulated and authored ASCAP’s first license agreement authorizing public performances of copyrighted musical works on the Internet. Since leaving ASCAP in 1998, Mr. Lincoff has worked with creators, rights owners, service providers and consumers to maximize the benefit each derives from protected content. Mr. Lincoff can be reached at BennettLincoff@gmail.com or through BennettLincoff.com.