

Enough is Enough: Time to Eliminate Design Patents and Rely on More Appropriate Copyright and Trademark Protection for Product Designs

Daniel H. Brean *

I. Introduction	326
II. The Original Purposes of the Design Patent Laws	328
III. The Historical Development of Copyright and Trademark Protection for Designs	330
A. How Copyright Came to Protect "Designs for Useful Articles"	330
B. How Trademark Law came to Protect "Trade Dress" and "Product Design"	332
IV. Comparing the Current Subject Matter of Protectable Designs Under the Patent, Copyright, and Trademark Laws	335
A. The Subject Matter of Design Patents	336
B. Copyrightable Designs for Useful Articles.....	338
C. Product Designs Under Lanham Act § 43(a).....	342
V. Comparing the Current Standards for Infringement of Designs Under the Patent, Copyright, and Trademark Laws	346
A. Design Patent Infringement – The Ordinary Observer Test	346
B. Copyright Infringement – Substantial Similarity and Fair Use	348
C. Trade Dress Infringement – Likelihood of Confusion.....	351
VI. How Designers and Manufacturers Can and Do Protect Their Designs.....	354
A. Who is Receiving Design Patents	354
B. Designers Who Have Utilized Copyright and Trademark Protection in Addition to or in Lieu of Design Patents.....	356

* University of Pittsburgh School of Law, J.D. expected 2008. Registered Patent Agent of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. I would like to thank Professor Janice M. Mueller and all the students in the Advanced Topics in Patent Law Seminar of Spring 2007 for their insightful criticism and support in the development of this paper. Also, thanks to my family and friends for what should be patently obvious reasons to all of them.